

	Schools responsible for identifying students	Students must self-identify
	Schools responsible for testing students	Students must pay for their testing, if needed
	Schools responsible for any needed services School must provide whatever services will help student succeed in class, testing, and any school-sponsored activity School must provide individualized tutoring	Students must seek out services Student allowed only certain accommodations in college classroom and testing Students must seek out tutoring, if needed, and must pay for it if college does not provide tutoring for non-disabled students. Individualized instruction is not guaranteed
	Schools must communicate with parents at regular intervals re: student's progress School must develop formal plan and it is school's responsibility to track student	College not allowed to contact parents without student's permission Student must ask for and "qualify" for services, and the student is responsible for much of the accommodation process(i.e., providing Accommodation Plan to professors and notifying office of test dates, etc.)

Students are not charged for academic accommodations which are determined by the college to be necessary to ensure equal access for a student with disabilities. Students MAY be charged for any additional accommodations not normally provided to students, such as individualized tutoring.

No; a student has the right to never mention his/her disability to a professor and to never submit the Accommodation Plan